(Special to The Evening World.)
AQUEDUCT, April 18.—Ideal racing conditions favored race-goers this afternoon. The track was as fast and dry as it could possibly be and the air was mild and spring-like. Nothing better could be desired. This being the first Saturday in the racing season it was expected that a great crowd would come down to the little course on the Jamaica Flats.

The expectation was realized. Every train arrived at the track late owing to the extremely heavy loads they carried. The crowd thronged through the gates until the grand stand was filled to overflowing. The betting ring was packed to suffocation, and the bookies had a real fast work out for the first time this season. Most of them employed an extra man to handle the money.

The card was very satisfactory, there being several races which promised contests out of the ordinary. The Arvenue Stakes had a good field of three-year-olds carded, and there was a splendid field of two-year-olds in the second race. The fields were large and the starter had more or less difficulty to get them away in good shape.

The Aqueduct track is narrow and the races fill to the limit, so that there is always more or less crowding.

Armearth was moved down from 20 to 1 to 12 in the last race he could not run fast enough to beat a goat. He had speed to-day, however, and after a long race he won by a head from Homestead, who also closed up a lot of ground. Cassville made the running and showed a lot of speed, but could not last the route.

Four and a half furlongs; for two-year-olds.
Starters, weight, jockeys. St. H. P. B. Betting.
Valour, 96, Redford, 2 1/2, 14 1/2, 2 1/2.

Valour and Peter Paul made a cracking good race of this. They went away together, raced head and head into the stretch, and on fought it out all the way home. Valour was a bit the gamer and stood the long drive best, setting home in front by half a length from Wizard who beat Peter Paul a length for the place.

Hobbs had the speed and she showed the way to the stretch, followed in close order by Star and Garter, Silurian and Mazo. When they straightened out for home there was a general shifting of positions. Ernest Parham and King Raine shot out of the bunch at the furlong pole in a hot drive. Ernest Parham won by three-quarters of a length from King Raine.

POLO GROUNDS, April 18.—Jamming, bumping and jostling, 20,000 men, women and children crowded to one another prophecies of the baseball game to-day at the Polo Grounds. The busiest people in New York were students of a deaf and dumb asylum who wisecracked with hands, feet and ears and refused to budge when a red-faced cop yelled "Move on!" In the dressing-room of the Giants it was quiet. The strong men talked to one another in subdued tones. Like Johnny Jones and his sister Sue, these steely muscled athletes had been "warmed by the sun, wet by the dew." They were hard as the eye of a Cuckoo-Head and as agile as the accountant of get-rich-quick concern. You would have thought they had nothing to fear on the earth, in the sky or the waters under the earth.

And yet these great men were nervous, shaky and twitching. "Why not fowitch!" Outside the gates, like great waves beating on the eastern shore came the roars, cat calls and howls of a multitude, a vast, swaying crowd that clattered like so many foolish virgins locked out of paradise. For there heaven meant inside of the gates; good angels interpreted as baseball players.

"Apples, peanuts and caramels!" howled a street huckster to the acrobatic mutes, who only grinned and gave him the "sign of the cross." "Hully Gee!" chirped the road agent, "dere phonograph is busted!" "Well, that's a fine mascot you picked out for our first appearance yesterday, reserving all his lung power until the last inning, when he let out a gentle sigh of 'Well, well' that rattled the false teeth of an elevated engineer."

And now the surface cars and elevated trains were emptying their thousands upon thousands, the great square canvases behind the right-field bleachers swayed to and fro in the breeze.

Horseshoe spheres cracked cheerily against willow ball, and the diamond

SUSPECTS WERE SEEN WITH BARREL MURDER VICTIM.

Morello, Pecararo and Another Prisoner
Now in Custody Were with the Mafia
Victim a Few Hours Before the Tragedy.

The strongest evidence which the police have been able to obtain against any of the Italians arrested on suspicion of having committed the brutal and mysterious barrel murder is that of the Secret Service agents against Morello, Pecararo and one other suspect whose name has not been revealed.

Inspector McCluskey said to-day that the Secret Service men had positive documentary evidence that the murdered man was with these three in the Stanton street butcher shop a few hours before the crime was committed. With this much in their possession the authorities are confident that they are on the right track, and they are pressing home their case with eager assurance.

Another effort was made to-day to identify the dead man at the Morgue, but it was not entirely successful. A young man who refused to tell his name said that the body was that of a Frenchman with whom he had worked during the Waterbury street car strike. This man is missing. He was to have appeared at a hearing of one of the strike cases in court the latter part of March, but disappeared. His wife, who is still in Waterbury, does not know where he is.

The man also refused to tell the Frenchman's name, on the ground that he might be mistaken, but he went with Detective Illich to find another man, who, he said, was better acquainted with the Frenchman, and could certainly identify him, if it were really he. The police put little faith in this partial identification.

GLOVE MAY GIVE A CLUE.

A clue which they hope may develop something is the name "Laird" on one of the buttons of a glove found in the barrel. This name is a trademark belonging to a man named Laird who owns the Paris Glove Company in Buffalo. The gloves so marked are made in Paris exclusively for this concern. The Buffalo police are assisting in the investigation.

The effort of Charles E. Le Barbier to set free Ignazio Lupo, one of the suspects, by writ of habeas corpus failed. The writ was denied by Justice Blanchard in the Supreme Court to-day on the ground that a great crime had been committed and the police were entitled to a reasonable time to investigate in the case of every suspected person. A writ of habeas corpus was issued by Judge Blanchard in the case of Pietro Inzerillo, owner of No. 226 Elizabeth street, returnable Monday.

Inspector McCluskey insists that the house at No. 226 Elizabeth street, which had been sealed up and guarded since the arrest of the suspects, was not the scene of the crime. His men searched the place thoroughly last Wednesday.

Assistant District-Attorney Garvan, Detective-Sergeant Carey and one of the Secret Service operatives went again to the Elizabeth street house to-day and opened it. A cat that had been locked in since the arrest of the proprietor Wednesday night was released. This appeared to be the extent of the operations of the investigators.

Previously an Evening World reporter got into the bake shop in the cellar. At the foot of a stairway leading up into the restaurant he found a hat. It was of good quality and it may have belonged to the murdered man. Detective Carey took the hat to Headquarters. There were no identifying marks in it.

"Not a blood-stain was found," said the Inspector to-day. "Undoubtedly there is plenty of blood where this man was killed, because his head was almost cut off, but we have not located the place where the butchery was perpetrated as yet."

"The Elizabeth street place has not been sealed up on my orders."

GEORGE JORDAN AND HIS WIFE, WHOM HE KILLED IN JEALOUS RAGE.

KILLS WIFE, SHOOTS BOY AND HIMSELF

In a Jealous Frenzy George
Jordan Makes a Desperate
Attempt to Annihilate
His Entire Family, and
Only One, a Little Daughter
Who Was Absent, Escapes from His Bullets.

HAD SWORN TO AVENGE HIS FANCIED WRONGS

When His Wife Tries to Kiss
Their Boy He Stops Her, and Drawing Revolver He Gives Her Mortal Wound, and Moment Later Fires Twice at His Son; Shoots Himself.

Inspired by blind jealousy, George Jordan armed himself with two revolvers to-day with the intention of wiping his family and himself out of existence. He killed his wife, fatally wounded himself, and put a bullet into the body of his eleven-year-old son, George, Jr. All that saved the life of his twelve-year-old daughter, Clara, was her absence from home and the fact that the insane rage of her father would not permit him to wait for her return. It is the old story of a pretty wife, fond of amusement, dancing and attention, and a serious-minded husband who could not dance, cared nothing for amusement, and accused his wife of unfaithfulness on an often that it was to be a man. So firmly was Jordan impressed with the idea that his wife had disgraced him that it was his intention to kill the children so that they might not learn of what he considered their mother's shame.

Jordan is thirty-five years old and built motors and engines for small launches in a shop at the foot of East Seventy-fourth street. His wife was thirty-two years old. He lived up to six weeks ago, with his wife and child, at the home of his father-in-law, a Mrs. Schultz, in Eighty-first street, between Second and Third avenues.

Both parents were devotedly attached to the son, and there is a belief among those who knew Jordan that he went to Cuba with the intention of doing away with the boy, so as to cause the mother sorrow. When he got back to this city Mrs. Jordan made efforts to see the boy, but Jordan kept him close.

He announced his intention of going to see his wife to-day and "having it out with her," as he expressed it. Under her instructions, little George dressed himself in his best apparel, and together they went to the flat in First avenue. In his right coat pocket Jordan had a .32-caliber revolver; in his left coat pocket, a revolver of .22 caliber.

Mrs. Jordan was in the kitchen waiting for her husband. She was startled when he entered. She wanted to kiss the boy, but Jordan would not allow it. This precipitated a quarrel that brought on the shooting before the little girl returned from an errand upon which her mother had sent her.

Shot Wife First.

Persons in other flats in the building heard the quarrel and then heard a single shot. Mrs. Mary Castle, who lives across the hall from the Jordans, opened her door in time to see Mrs. Jordan run out of the kitchen with her hands to her breast.

"My husband has shot me; he has shot me," she screamed as she ran down the stairs into the hallway.

On the stairs she met a saloon kept by a Jewish man. He ran into the hall when he heard the shot. He reached the foot of the stairs just as Mrs. Jordan ran out, and she fell dead in his arms.

Just another shot was heard on the stairs from the front of the Jordans, and still another. The boy, terrified at the shooting of his mother, had run into the hall into the parlor and hidden behind a chair. Jordan dragged him out.
